countries regularly track gross domestic product gdp as an indicator of their economic progress but not wealth the assets such as infrastructure forests minerals and human capital that produce gdp in contrast corporations routinely report on both their income and assets to assess their economic health and prospects for the future wealth accounts allow countries to take stock of their assets to monitor the sustainability of development an urgent concern today for all countries the changing wealth of nations 2018 building a sustainable future covers national wealth for 141 countries over 20 years 1995 2014 as the sum of produced capital 19 types of natural capital net foreign assets and human capital overall as well as by gender and type of employment great progress has been made in estimating wealth since the first volume where is the wealth of nations measuring capital for the 21st century was published in 2006 new data substantially improve estimates of natural capital and for the first time human capital is measured by using household surveys to estimate lifetime earnings the changing wealth of nations 2018 begins with a review of global and regional trends in wealth over the past two decades and provides examples of how wealth accounts can be used for the analysis of development patterns several chapters discuss the new work on human capital and its application in development policy the book then tackles elements of natural capital that are not yet fully incorporated in the wealth accounts air pollution marine fisheries and ecosystems this book targets policy makers but will engage anyone committed to building a sustainable future for the planet

a rigorous pathbreaking analysis demonstrating that a country's prosperity is directly related in the long run to the skills of its population in this book eric hanushek and ludger woessmann make a simple central claim developed with rigorous theoretical and empirical support knowledge is the key to a country s development of course every country acknowledges the importance of developing human capital but hanushek and woessmann argue that message has become distorted with politicians and researchers concentrating not on valued skills but on proxies for them the common focus is on school attainment although time in school provides a very misleading picture of how skills enter into development hanushek and woessmann contend that the cognitive skills of the population which they term the knowledge capital of a nation are essential to long run prosperity hanushek and woessmann subject their hypotheses about the relationship between cognitive skills as consistently measured by international student assessments and economic growth to a series of tests including alternate specifications different subsets of countries and econometric analysis of causal interpretations they find that their main results are remarkably robust and equally applicable to developing and developed countries they demonstrate for example that the latin american growth puzzle and the east asian miracle can be explained by these regions knowledge capital turning to the policy implications of their argument they call for an education system that develops effective accountability promotes choice and competition and provides direct rewards for good performance
